The Basic Income Earth Network was founded in 1986 as the Basic Income European Network. It expanded its scope from Europe to the Earth in 2004. It serves as a link between individuals and groups committed to or interested in basic income, and fosters informed discussion on this topic throughout the world.

The fundamental justification for Basic Income rests in its support for human dignity. It is a right that all societies must respect. Nevertheless, many economists and social policy analysts are researching the developmental impact of universal income grants. In part, researchers are responding to the spurious arguments of Basic Income’s opponents, who hide behind the straw figures of dependency and unsustainability. More importantly, analysts are finding that universal income programmes effectively promote people’s accumulation of human capital—health, education, skills, nutrition. Basic Income strengthens labour markets, providing a springboard to more sustaining livelihoods. Basic Income is developmental. The main theme of the 2006 Basic Income Earth Network Congress will explore how strengthening universalism in social protection will foster a more developmental State, with greater economic freedom and opportunity for all People.

Following the success of the 2004 Congress in Barcelona and the transformation of the Basic Income European Network into the Basic Income Earth Network (BIEN), BIEN and the Basic Income Grant Coalition (BIG Coalition) of South Africa invite you to spend a few days on the tip of Africa to participate in the first international “Earth” BIEN Congress. It will form part of the Conference that will take place on 2-4 November 2006 in Cape Town, South Africa. Further details about the official Call for papers in this NewsFlash.

2. CALL FOR PAPERS / BIEN 11th CONGRESS: 2-4 November 2006, Cape Town, South Africa.
Title of Conference and Congress: UNIVERSALISM STRENGTHENS DEVELOPMENT

BIEN's 11th International Congress will be held in Cape Town, South Africa, on 2-4
November 2006. The organizing committee invite you to submit a proposal for your presentation at the Conference. Our theme for this Conference has a twin focus: to strengthen demands for universal provision of social protection and to illuminate the impact of universalism on social and economic development. Proposals on all aspects of Basic Income are welcome, and the committee will endeavour to accommodate as many of the proposals outside the main theme or sub-themes as possible.

For this Conference BIEN is adding another dimension to the proceedings. While the main focus of the Conference will be on the more academic and formal papers presented in plenary and panel discussion sessions, we invite participants who wish to participate in a less formal manner to put forward proposals for the workshops. These workshops will focus on issues of mobilisation and implementation of Basic Income. The workshops will be practical and some even hands-on. In this way we hope to embrace the new challenges countries are experiencing in accepting and promoting the ideals and ideas of Basic Income in the world.

Full details can be found in the official Call for Papers that has been posted on BIEN’s website

3. BASIC INCOME STUDIES SIGNS AN AGREEMENT WITH THE BERKELEY ELECTRONIC PRESS

Basic Income Studies (BIS), the new international academic journal for basic income research, is pleased to announce that it has signed a publishing agreement with The Berkeley Electronic Press (www.bepress.com). Bepress is a well-known electronic publisher of a wide range of academic journals particularly in the fields of economics and law and a representative of the "new standard in scholarly publishing". Founded by academics in 1999, Bepress produces innovative and effective means of content production and dissemination for journals and publishers.

Publication with Bepress will have numerous advantages for BIS: invaluable assistance in the editorial and production process through the use of Bepress' licenced editorial management software; administration of individual and institutional subscriptions; access to Bepress' worldwide advertising network to assist us in promoting basic income research. In addition the close association with a recognized publisher will give BIS recognition as a serious academic publication.

Over the past months the BIS editorial team and Bepress have put a lot of work in putting together a website with electronic submission facilities. Our new website will be officially launched at the USBIG conference in Philadelphia on 25 February. We invite all of you to visit our site afterwards.

The BIS inaugural issue with contributions by G.A Cohen, Erik Olin Wright, Robert van der Veen and Philippe Van Parijs and many others is due to be published in June 2006. In the meantime BIS is constantly on the look-out for research articles and book reviews.

4. EVENTS

*ZURICH (CH), 6 October 2005, BIEN-Switzerland organizes open discussion on basic income

BIEN-Switzerland has organised a panel discussion on unconditional basic income on the 6th of October in Zurich, at the "Bernhard-Theater". Main discussants were Joachim Mitschke (Professor for Economic in Frankfurt), Michael Opielka (Professor for Social Policy in Jena), and Peter Ulrich (Professor for Business Ethics in St. Gallen). Rather than a scientific exchange it was a controversial "political discussion" in front of about hundred spectators, and no specific papers were presented. The newspaper "Neue Bürcher Zeitung" reported on the conference in its October 8th issue.

*SAO PAULO (BR), 23-25 November 2005, National Seminar on Income Transfer

This event was organized and coordinated through an academic cooperation among the following institutions: "Public Policies Post Graduation Program" from the Universidade Federal of Maranhão; "Post Graduation in Social Services" from the Pontificia Universidade Católica in São Paulo and the "Studies Nucleus on Public Policies" from the Universidade Estadual de Campinas. The National Seminar on Income Transfer was based on the experiences of the programs in progress in the country and the researches that are being developed in the institutions which promoted the event, taking into account the 10 years of the implementation of these programs in Brazil, the implementation of these experiences in all Brazilian municipalities, the importance of these programs in remodeling the content and the dynamics of the Brazilian System of Social Protection today, and the proposal of the unification of the programs at the National Level.

The Seminar was directed by the following targets:

a) The follow-up and the assessment of the developing process in the Income Transfer Programs that are being implemented in Brazil;
b) To explain the experiences and the scientific works on these programs;
c) To foster the national exchange between organizations and entities responsible for the experiences;
d) To produce general or specific recommendations aiming at certain programs;
e) To present the Citizen's Basic Income Brazilian Network.

The programme was constituted by the presentations of experiences and of research results in the following conferences:

"Income Transfer Programs in the Context of the Social Protection Brazilian System" ("Os Programas de Transferência de Renda no Contexto do Sistema Brasileiro de Proteção Social") (Profa. Dra. Maria Ozanira da Silva e Silva, Universidade Federal do Maranhão);

"The Income Transfer State Programs and its linking to the Municipal and Federal Programs" ("Os Programas Estaduais de Transferência de Renda e sua articulação com os Programas Federais e Municipais") (Profa. Dra. Maria Helena Guimarães de Castro, Social Development State Secretary in São Paulo);

"The Income Transfer Municipal Programs and its linking to the Bolsa Família Program") (Os Programas Municipais de Transferência de Renda e sua articulação com o Bolsa Família") (Dr. Antônio Pereira Pesaro, Social Assistance Municipal Secretary in São Paulo);

"The Federal Government Income Transfer Programs: nowadays and unification" (Os Programas de Transferência de Renda do Governo Federal: atualidade e unificação") (representative of the Social Development and Combat against Hunger Ministry);

Presentation of the Citizen's Basic Income Brazilian Network (Rede Brasileira de Renda Básica de Cidadania) (Senator Eduardo Matarazzo Suplicy)"
Italian interest in a basic income is growing. On December 2, 2005, a public conference was organised in Rome to discuss 'the right to a basic income'. More than 200 persons, among whom numerous members from trade unions, social movements, journalists, local administrators were present at this meeting promoted by the Councillor’s Office on Labour of Regione Lazio. The invited plenary speakers were Alessandra Tibaldi, Stefano Sacchi, Guy Standing, Rafael Pinilla Palleja, Jose Iglesias Fernandez, Luigi Nieri, Alessandra Mandarelli and Giuseppe Mariani. The interventions of the participants pointed out the need and the possibility to start experiments of basic income as part of a new redistributive policy.

The meeting pointed out the need to launch a wider plan of reconstruction of the Italian welfare state system which takes the matter of basic income into account. A basic income in cash or in kind must be the core of future social policies. Recent reforms of the Italian Constitution now give more power to the regions in the field of welfare. The political actors who were present such as the Member of the Councillor’s Office on Labour and the Member of the Councillor’s Office on Budget declared that they are in favour of taking a course which leads to the introduction of a regional bill about basic income.

With the General Election due to take place in 2006, there is much debate about what platforms should be presented on welfare by the opposition parties. As is well known, the Italian welfare state is particularly undeveloped by comparison with all the European countries to the north of Italy. But there is considerable disquiet about the growth of precarious labour contracts and the pressure on the pension system, as well as the shrinking Italian family and the ageing of the population. Economic insecurities are pervasive, and in that context movements towards a basic income are conceivable. For further information: infoxoa@infoxoa.org

On January 6, 2006, a panel on "The Basic Income Guarantee and Living Standards" was organized within the framework of the 2006 Allied Social Science Association Meeting. For further information: http://www.socialeconomics.org/ASSAProg.htm

A panel discussion about an unconditional basic income will take place at the University of Dortmund, February 10, 2006. Participants: Wolfram Richter (Economist, Univ. of Dortmund), Lutz Wingert (Philosopher, Univ. of Dortmund), Sascha Liebermann (Sociologist, Univ. of Dortmund), Götz Werner (Owner, DM Drugstores, and Univ. of Karlsruhe), Claus Offe (Political Scientist, Hertie School of Governance Berlin).

A two days symposium on basic income will be held at the University of Karlsruhe on Feb. 23-24, 2006. For further information: André Presse

*PHILADELPHIA (US), 24-26 February 2006: The Fifth Congress of USBIG

5. GLIMPSES OF NATIONAL DEBATES

*GERMANY: PRESIDENT KOHLER SAYS BASIC INCOME IS WORTH CONSIDERING

In an interview with the weekly "Stern" (28 December 2005), German President Horst Kohler suggested that the idea of a basic income should be considered as a key strategy to prevent social exclusion of the long-term unemployed. He referred to discussions about a negative income tax in the USA.

*GERMANY: FREEDOM, NOT FULL EMPLOYMENT

In recent weeks the group "Freedom, not Full Employment" has been actively trying to give more visibility to the idea of basic income. It advertised the idea of an unconditional basic income in subway stations in Cologne (Dec. 6-12, 2005) and Hamburg (Dec. 9-18, 2005) (see www.freiheitstvollbeschaefigung.de/plakaktion.htm). One of its more active members, sociologist Sascha Liebermann, has been discussing "Work and Income" in a radio show on Bayern 2 Radio (Bavaria), January 5, 2006, 10-11 AM (http://www.br-online.de/programme/bayern2/). Liebermann also wrote a reply to a paper by Ulrich Busch ("The Land of Milk and Honey - a Leftist Utopia? Critique of the Idea of an Unconditional Basic Income", which was published in "utopie kreativ", no. 181, November 2005. This reply is entitled "Freedom is a Challenge, not the Land of Milk and Honey", and will be published in "utopie kreativ", no. 184, February 2006. Several German newspapers have echoed the activities of the group "Freedom, not Full Employment". See for instance an interview in "Thüringer Allgemeine " under the title: "Freiheit zur Muße" (Freedom for Leisure), with Sascha Liebermann, published on January 13, 2006; or an interview in "Tageszeitung" (Taz - regional edition of North Rhine Westfalia) with Sascha Liebermann and Ute Fischer, published on January 28, 2006.

The main Theses defended by the group are now translated into French on its website: www.freiheitstvollbeschaefigung.de
NAMIBIA: PRESIDENT MEETS BASIC INCOME COALITION

According to the January 27, 2006 issue of the daily newspaper "The Namibian" (Windhoek), Namibian President Hifikepunye Pohamba met representatives of the Basic Income Grant Coalition (BIG) at State House. The Coalition, made up of a host of different organisations, is lobbying for the introduction of an unconditional N$100 minimum grant to every Namibian not yet eligible for a Government pension. The President met the head of the delegation, Bishop Zephania Kameeta, BIG coordinator Reverend Philip Strydom, Legal Assistance Centre (LAC) Director Norman Tjombe and academic researcher Reverend Dirk Haarman, in a closed-door session to discuss the implementation of the proposed grant. At the end of the day, Pohamba had "not committed himself to anything", Kameeta said after emerging from the hour-long meeting, although the President did promise to take the matter up with Cabinet. "That's all we can ask," Kameeta said. "We cannot give the President of Namibia a time frame, but for us this was enough. The most positive thing is that he said we must stay in consultation, stay in communication. We had a very open and frank discussion. He asked very frank questions, so the meeting went beyond our expectations."

The idea for a Namibian basic income started in 2002, Kameeta told the President before the closed-door session began, when Government's Namibian Tax Consortium (Namtax) stated that it found the best method of addressing poverty and inequality to be a universal income grant. The grant would retrieve the money from those not in need, Kameeta said, through progressive tax adjustments. In this same way, the grant would overcome the threat of people becoming dependent on it. Last year, BIG Coalition representatives met the then Speaker of the National Assembly, Theo-Ben Gurirab, and the Parliamentary Committee on Human Resources, Social and Community Development. According to Reverend Haarman, both entities were supportive of the idea.

NEW ZEALAND: UNIVERSAL INCOME TRUST ACTIVELY PROMOTES BASIC INCOME

In 2005 the Universal Income Trust (UIT) has promoted and made available its educational brochures and other resources extensively throughout New Zealand, in both urban and rural areas. This has been done via telephone, email, physical post and in person. As a result, the Trust's support networks have been greatly strengthened and extended. It has received help from an increasing number of organisations and individuals who have wished to display and/or distribute Universal Income resources. The types of organisations have included the tertiary education sector especially student associations, citizen advice centres, information centres, recycling centres, community houses, pre-school centres, cafes, and 170 or so public libraries which constitutes almost the entire public library network in Aotearoa. The Asian translations have been appreciated in many areas. The Trust now has two static vertical displays: Universal Income for a Sustainable Future and Universal Income Systems: A Global Vignette. One or both have been mounted in various public libraries.

SPAIN: DISCUSSION ABOUT A BASIC INCOME FOR FARMERS

In the context of the reform of the European Common Agrarian Policy, Spanish Ministry of Agriculture held a meeting with the Deputy Director of the General Secretariat for Underprivileged Zones and a small group of Basic Income supporters at the end of December 2005. The main topic of discussion was the differences between a universal unconditional Basic Income and a guaranteed income focused on farmers. Although the representatives of the Ministry did not make a substantial commitment, they showed disposal to give support to a symposium on Basic Income. The aim of the participants at the meeting was to convince the Ministry of Agriculture to raise the cause of Basic Income at the debates on the reform of the Common Agricultural Policy of the European Union.

*ENGLISH

DAHMS, Harry F. (2005), “Globalization as Hyper-Alienation: Critiques of Traditional Marxism as Arguments for Basic Income,” Social Theory as Politics in Knowledge (Current Perspectives in Social Theory, vol. 23) (London: Elsevier, 2005), pp. 205-76. Basic income-related schemes both try to retain and overcome certain aspects of the social welfare state. Combined with Keynesian social and economic policies, the social welfare state helped to secure social and political stability, and facilitated unprecedented economic expansion and development. Yet in retrospect, the social policy paradigm that emerged during the Cold War does not appear to have been directed at eradicating, nor at alleviating once and for all, those inequalities. Rather, it sustained a network of enduring social and economic inequalities. Both van Parijs and van der Veen's argument about basic income that began with "a capitalist road to communism" (1986), and Moishe Postone's “reinterpretation of Marx's critical theory” (1993), are critiques of “traditional Marxism” that complement and support each other in important ways, as they strengthen arguments for basic income by emphasizing how the thrust of critical Marxism is directed at illuminating how the dominant social policy paradigm is a mechanism that maintains forms of social, political, cultural and economic life in a state of stasis that is increasingly immune to qualitative transformations.

In his seminal work on an unconditional basic income for each citizen, Philippe Van Parijs provides a new paradigm to facilitate a discussion on the morality (or lack there of) inherent within our global distribution system of goods and services. He also (implicitly) challenges the field to consider the impact of greater exchange parity upon our material world and the quality of life afforded our most vulnerable consumers. After briefly presenting his approach, the work of John Rawls on distributive justice and this author's own research on consumption adequacy is integrated into this perspective to form a powerful model for policy makers. Ronald Paul Hill is Bank of America Professor of Corporate Social Responsibility and founding dean, College of Business, University of South Florida St. Petersburg.
HUMPHREYS, John (2005), "Reform 30/30: Rebuilding Australia's Tax and Welfare System", CIS Policy Monograph 70, 27pp. Much has been said about the need for tax and welfare reform in Australia. In this paper the author argues that the tyranny of the status quo and self-imposed limitations such as ‘budget neutrality’ and ‘no-person-worse-off’ has doomed any radical reform proposal to failure. He advocates what he calls a “tax revolution” for Australia: “Reform 30/30”. Under Reform 30/30, all income taxes (company, Capital Gains Tax [CGT], Pay As You Go [PAYG], Fringe Benefits Tax [FBT]) would be equal at 30%, and the "Medicare levy" removed. The tax free threshold (TFT) would be increased to A$30,000 per person and all tax expenditures (tax deductions, offsets, and so on) would be removed. The current welfare system would be replaced by a sliding scale of payments (a Negative Income Tax or NIT) that phased out at 30% and finished at an income of A$30,000. The NIT would allow the removal of the minimum wage which would lead to the creation of 500,000 new jobs. The incentives for low-income earners will be improved as their effective marginal tax rate (EMTR) is reduced from over 60% to 30% so that people have an incentive to take the new jobs. According to the author of this study, these two policies represent the best solution to unemployment and Reform 30/30 is unambiguously beneficial to the economy with estimated benefits of A$90 billion as well as higher ongoing economic growth. Reform 30/30 is unambiguously simpler than the current system with no tax return, no tax avoidance opportunities and much lower administrative costs. Issues of equity will always be contentious, but Reform 30/30 is more equitable than the status quo for several reasons. First, it massively reduces unemployment and poverty. Second, it ends the discrimination against couples. Third, it ends the discrimination against risky business and inconsistent income. Finally, this reform will actually pay for itself. Rough estimates suggest a medium-term impact on the budget of +A$15 billion per year, and more in the long run. Reform 30/30 offers 500,000 new jobs, less poverty, a A$90 billion bigger economy, higher growth rates, lower tax levels and a simpler, fairer tax/welfare system and more money in the budget. The price is that some sacred cows of politics (‘progressive’ tax, minimum wage, no-person-worse-off) will have to be sacrificed. It’s worth it, the author concludes. The paper can be downloaded at http://www.cis.org.au/Publications/policymonographs/pm70.pdf

PAXTON Will, WHITE Stuart, and MAXWELL Dominic (eds.) (2006). The citizen's stake. Exploring the future of universal asset policies. Bristol, The Policy Press, 224 pages, Paperback ISBN 1861346999, Hardback ISBN 1861347006. Can and should asset-based policies such as universal capital grants become a new pillar of the welfare state? Can they form the basis for a more egalitarian form of market economy? The citizen's stake throws open the debate by bringing together the ideas of leading thinkers in academia and policy to explore the future scope of asset-based policies in Britain. The book examines asset-based welfare in connection with a wide range of issues, from tax policy to childcare, and includes the results of two innovative studies of public opinion on capital grants and inheritance tax. It is the first time that public opinion work has been integrated with theory into a serious and cohesive consideration of practical options for the future of asset-based welfare.
The citizen's stake is accessibly written and aimed at a broad audience of academics, students and policy-makers. Indeed, anyone interested in how this new policy field can and should develop will want to read this book. The discussions are relevant to academics, researchers and policy makers overseas, particularly in the US, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Germany, Ireland and Sweden, where there is a high level of interest in this topic.

PERREAULT Jean-François (2005), Basic Income and labour market related issues (« Analyse des enjeux d’une Allocation Universelle sur le marché du travail »), Master Thesis, Université du Québec à Trois-Rivières (UQTR), Département Sciences de la gestion, Supervisor: Benoît-Mario Papillon (benoit-mario.papillon@uqtr.ca), 2005.
In the literature, labour market considerations in the analysis of Basic Income (BI) policies have generally focused on labour force participation. In the first part of the thesis, after a short historical review of the origin of the idea of a BI policy, the author briefly discusses some justifications for this type of policy. In order to take a broader perspective over the issues, BI policies are compared with other policies having similar objectives: welfare payments and a negative income tax. The second part of the thesis looks into the effects of a BI policy on labour markets. In doing so, the author synthesizes what has been found on labour force participation effects in light of various BI policy experiences in North America over the recent decades, and then goes beyond labour force participation effect and hypothesises a number of other effects pertaining to various dimensions of labour markets.
As argued by most critics of BI policies, researches have confirmed that the effect on labour force participation is negative but much less than expected. Furthermore, a broader view at dimensions of labour markets suggests that BI policies could contribute in various ways to the improvement of labour market performance in terms of wage level and job satisfaction; BI policies give the means to low income class people to stay longer at school; it is also sensible to conjecture other positive effects in terms of job search and contract negotiation. In addition, impacts are also predictable at other levels, labour market flexibility and non-profitable activities to name a few.

An interview with Philippe Van Parijs (chair of BIEN's International Board) conducted by Italian philosopher Benedetta Giovanola (University of Macerata) on the relationship between basic income, justice and human rights, and on the prospects for basic income in Europe and beyond.

*SPANISH

This article by Uruguayan philosopher and BI supporter Christian Pérez Muñoz offers a critical revision of the notion of “real freedom for all” and its institutional implications. Pérez Muñoz argues that Van Parijs’ egalitarian scheme partially fails since it does not consider individuals’ capacities to convert their resources into true freedom. Following Elisabeth Anderson line of argument, the author stresses that the achievement of individual freedom is closely linked to individuals’ responsibility when actions, preferences and choices are to be faced. This is why he suggests, as Richard Arneson does, that the main problem into the “real freedom” scheme is the lack of an in-depth analyse of the – both social and psychological - constraints that influence over the way individuals make their choices and form their preferences. In effect, people normally lack the necessary information to responsibly decide. Although it is true that the use of the metrics of preferences and welfare leads to conceptual problems that the “real freedom” perspective sorts out, we must go beyond a mere initial equalization of opportunities and build a theory of justice taking into account, as Amartya Sen has suggested, the real capacities of individuals to use the resources at their disposal. As the author stresses, “it is desirable that individuals make whatever they want to make with themselves; but only in the case they possess the necessary information to evaluate the consequences of their choices”. This is why “the construction of institutions in a ‘free society’ cannot rest on the assumption that individuals enjoy a status of full self-ownership”. A solid idea of freedom is not possible if individuals lack a relevant degree of autonomy to decide on their own life plans from genuinely formed preferences. This argument leads the author to the conclusion that the institutional scheme suggested by Philippe Van Parijs is incomplete because it disregards agents’ capacity to choose. This is, then, an objection to the idea of “real freedom” rather than to Basic Income: in fact, Basic Income can be seen as an excellent instrument to compensate those inequalities that erode individuals’ capacity to decide. Something like educational institutions is also required not to inculcate values – the author is always committed to a liberal perspective -, but to provide people with the necessary information to evaluate preferences and beliefs and to anticipate the consequences of their actions. Such a set of measures is a necessary condition for the achievement of effective “real freedom”.

A Dutch website has been integrated into the website of the Global Basic Income Foundation: www.globalincome.org > Nederlands. These new pages should make the GBI website more accessible to a broader audience in Belgium and the Netherlands. The website is not just a translation of the pages in English, since some texts have been re-written. Furthermore, a new page has been added to the English as well as to the Dutch site: an online questionnaire which makes it easier for people to give their opinion about a Global Basic Income.

FIAN INTERNATIONAL

KUNNEMAN, Rolf (2005), “Basic Food Income – Option or Obligation?”, FIAN International, Defending the right to food worldwide. January 15, 2005, 31 pages. About a quarter of those people facing food insecurity are so undernourished that they are unable to work. Others are unable to engage in agricultural work or wage labour due to infirmity or responsibilities such as family care (e.g. HIV-positive people and orphans). Even access to resources and minimum wages cannot help either of these two groups. A universal basic income paid to every citizen without means-testing and irrespective of age and employment status, which is recouped through taxation from better earners, is an effective way of remedying the abject poverty and destitution faced by the lowest quartile of the poor. Pilot programmes in different countries have shown that such cash transfer programmes can raise the standard of living of this group by providing the means for procuring food. FIAN supports civil society efforts towards the creation of basic income programmes in different countries of the world.
