1. EDITORIAL: Tribute to André Gorz

French social philosopher and journalist André Gorz (born in 1923) committed suicide with his wife in their home in Vosnon (France), and was found dead on September 24, 2007. Gorz was one of the most prominent advocates of an unconditional basic income. In his classic essays on work, socialism, or green politics, he had first expressed some scepticism with regard to the idea of an “income by right”. His chapter in Arguing for Basic Income (edited by Philippe Van Parijs, Verso, 1996) was significantly entitled: “On the Difference between Society and Community, and Why Basic Income Cannot by itself Confer Full Membership of Either”. But since 1997 and the publication of Misères du présent, Richesse du possible, Gorz was defending the introduction of a basic income as the logical consequence of technological change, and a necessary complement to working-time reduction. His last book, published in 2006, was a moving love letter entitled Lettre à D.. It was dedicated to his wife Dorine, who was 83 and of British origin and had been ill for several years. "You have just turned 82”, Gorz wrote. “You are still beautiful, gracious and desirable. We have been living together for 58 years and I love you more than ever.”

The theme of this World Congress is: Inequality and Development in a Globalised Economy - The Basic Income Option. This two-day event involving participants from all the continents of the world will be preceded by a one-day event (June 19, 2008) which will focus on Basic Income in Ireland and will be open to all participants in the World Congress.

This Congress will combine plenary sessions featuring invited speakers and parallel workshops with volunteered papers. Major themes to be addressed include:

- Why Basic Income provides a key part of the answer to the challenges posed on issues such as inequality and development in the emerging globalised world.

3. EVENTS

MANCHESTER (UK), 3-5 September 2007: Workshop on 'Ethics, Work and Emancipation'

David Casassas (University of Oxford) and Jurgen De Wispelaere (Trinity College Dublin) presented papers on basic income in a panel on the ethics of work at the 4th Manchester Workshops in Political Theory (Manchester Metropolitan University, panel convened by Keith Breen of Queen's University Belfast). Casassas’ paper offered an argument in favour of a republican perspective on the organisation of work in contemporary society, and the need to supplement existing policies with an unconditional basic income to promote people's bargaining power by securing their material independence. De Wispelaere argued that libertarian paternalism offers a viable policy perspective to accommodate concerns about individuals "blowing" their entitlements without having to restrict the unconditional nature of radical basic income proposals. Both presentations generated considerable interest with the audience and a lively discussion ensued.

NAPLES (IT), 12-15 September 2007, EUROSEAS 5th Annual Conference

As part of the panel on “Timor Leste: How to Build a New Nation in Southeast Asia in the 21st Century?”, held within the framework of the European Association for South-East Asian Studies (EUROSEAS) 5th Annual Conference (Naples, 12-15 September 2007), David Casassas, Daniel Raventós and Julie Wark gave a paper entitled “Basic Income and the Right to Existence in Timor Leste”. Aiming to spread the idea of Basic Income among social scientists that are non-specialists on Basic Income, this paper tried to open up the doors to a debate on what Basic Income can offer developing countries in terms of economic and social development, social inclusion and political participation, as well as the possible ways to fund a Basic Income in a country like East Timor, where oil revenues constitute a very important source of income for the State.

The Centre for the Study of Social Justice, along with the Department of Politics and International Relations, Oxford's Public Policy Unit, and the Association for Legal and Social Philosophy (ALSP), will be hosting a two-day conference entitled 'Towards a Basic Income Society?'.
For further information visit the conference website at http://social-justice.politics.ox.ac.uk/events/basicincome, or contact the organizers David Casassas (University of Oxford) and Jurgen De Wispelaere (Trinity College Dublin) at basic.income@politics.ox.ac.uk. A full program with titles of all contributions is now available. Please notice that registration is open until 18 October 2007, 12 noon.

Outline: The past two decades have witnessed a remarkable revival in both academic and policy circles of the idea that every citizen should be granted an unconditional basic income by right, without a means test or work requirement. Nevertheless, many questions remain before this idea could be turned into a workable policy. Prominent amongst these are questions about the very shape of a basic income society: what would a society in which an unconditional basic income takes a central place look like in terms of its broader policies and institutions? Relatedly, there are important debates about the normative justification and political feasibility of a basic income society. The conference reflects on these questions, aiming to chart both promising avenues and pitfalls in the current debate.

Participants include Simon Birnbaum, David Casassas, Jurgen De Wispelaere, Antoni Domenech, Tony Fitzpatrick, Louise Haagh, Bill Jordan, José Antonio Noguera, Michael Opielka, Carole Pateman, David Purdy, Daniel Raventós, Yannick Vanderborght, Stuart White and Karl Widerquist.

4. GLIMPSES OF NATIONAL DEBATES

* ASIA: DIRECTOR-GENERAL OF THE ILO ARGUES FOR BASIC INCOME

According to a Press Release of the United Nations News Center, Director-General Juan Somavia of the United Nations International Labour Organization (ILO) said at a three-day conference held in Beijing (August 2007) that a sustainable approach to development is crucial to keep pace with Asia's unprecedented economic growth, and called for national measures across the continent to ensure social welfare, including a basic income. The "job-weak growth" is "not politically sustainable over the long run because underlying it all are different forms of social tensions already expressing themselves in different ways," Somavia said in an address to delegates at an Asian Forum on Growth, Employment and Decent Work. The Forum is the first major gathering of senior government, labour and employer representatives from nearly two dozen countries in Asia and the Pacific since the launch of the Decent Work Decade at the ILO's Asian regional meeting last year. Participants - including representatives of finance and planning ministries, academics and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) - discussed how create policies aimed to integrate sustainable development and decent work.

According to the Press Release, Mr. Somavia stressed that Asian countries share commonalities, and that the "time has come to strive for a social floor in every country according to its means, pursued as a systematic national and international development objective to expand the security of its people." For example, he cited as a strategy "a basic income, health care and education package - together with organization, rights at work and empowerment to voice and defend their interests." When combined, "these measures can no doubt enhance growth and productivity," Mr. Somavia noted. "But they are also justified by the enormous growth in wealth creation that has been taking place."

* CZECH REPUBLIC: EXCHANGES ON BASIC INCOME IN ACADEMIC CIRCLES

Marek Hrubec and Martin Brabc initiated a discussion on basic income in the Czech Philosophical Journal No. 3, 2005. Before a publication of their paper and their translation of Philippe van Parijs’ paper Basic Income for All that appeared in the same issue of the journal, the debate on basic income in the Czech language appeared only in several articles in the Czech newspapers. Hrubec and Brabc wrote a paper On egalitarian libertarianism in which they analysed, firstly, left libertarianism in relation to liberalism, communitarianism, Critical theory of the Frankfurt School and other theories. Secondly, they deal with basic ideas of left libertarianism. Thirdly, they focus especially on political philosophy of Philippe Van Parijs, and analyse his conception of basic income, and especially his book Real Freedom for All. In the end, the article reconstructs other authors’ reactions to his conception of basic income.

Miloslav Bednar replied in Philosophical Journal No. 4, 2005. In his paper The Critical Standpoint to the Application of Basic Income, he criticises Philippe Van Parijs, Marek Hrubec and Martin Brabec. The author says that their socialist theory does not distinguish between philosophical and political dimension of equality and freedom, on the one hand, and economic dimension of those, on the other. Moreover, the paper tries to show that basic income leads to the dependency of citizens on the state.

In their article Misunderstanding of the Discussion on Universal Basic Income (in the same issue of Philosophical Journal No. 4, 2005), Marek Hrubec and Martin Brabec defend Philippe Van Parijs’s ideas, and explain why Miloslav Bednar is wrong. They show that Bednar’s criticism is not appropriate, and they focus especially on private property. They also raise objection to Bednar’s thesis that an application of basic income leads to the dependency of citizens on the state. They emphasize that basic income is unconditional: an every citizen has right to get it, and the state has an obligation to pay it. Consequently, they show that unconditional basic income can provide freedom and independence.

Miloslav Bednar replied again in Philosophical Journal No. 5, 2005. In his criticism The Untenable Conception of Universal Basic Income, Bednar replies to Hrubec’s and Brabec’s paper, and extends and deepens his criticism of basic income and its concept of freedom. He criticizes what he calls its Marxist background, i.e. its emphasis on economic dimension of freedom. Then, he criticises basic income’s concept of autonomy.

Marek Hrubec’s and Martin Brabec’s reply On Freedom and Basic Income was published in Philosophical Journal No. 6, 2005. Authors react to Bednar’s reply and raise questions which could clarify basic terms of the discussion, particularly a concept of freedom: What is a definition of concepts of freedom and autonomy, and what is a connection between them? What is a connection between basic income and autonomy? Why do citizens lose autonomy (according to Bednar’s criticism) when they receive basic income?

Miloslav Bednar, in his reply Freedom, State and an Elimination of Freedom by Means of Unconditional Basic Income published in Philosophical Journal No. 1, 2006, tries to explain his concepts of freedom and autonomy, and a relation between political freedom and economic reality. His conception of freedom means autonomy in a sense of self-determining decision and behaviour emanating from the actor independent from an analysis of her or his relation to the economic reality. According to the author, the economic reality influences freedom but it is not a condition of free decision and behaviour.

In his reply The Issue of Definition of Freedom in Philosophical Journal, No. 2, 2006, Martin Brabec identifies the basic misunderstanding in the discussion in different definitions of a concept of freedom. Author criticizes the arbitrary and strongly anti-intuitive Bednar’s opinions that citizen’s dependence on basic income destroys autonomy, and that autonomy is not destroyed by her or his dependence on the labour market.

Martin Skabraha wrote a reply Two Dogmas of Conservative Liberalism that appeared in Philosophical Journal No. 3, 2006. It is a criticism of the discussion on basic income published in previous issues of the Journal. Author tries to clarify a general conceptual framework of the discussion. Firstly, he undermines the distinction between the world of politics as a sphere of autonomy and the world of economy as a sphere of necessity. Secondly, author shows that strong social inequality destroys an ideal of freedom, and, therefore, it should be eliminated in favour of liberal freedom.

Ondrej Stech in his reply Universal Basic Income: On Blindness to the Context published in Journal of Philosophy No. 1, 2007, criticizes the idea of basic income from the point of view of left communitarism. The paper appreciates libertarian focus on material equality but criticises libertarian social ontology. From the communitarian point of view, an emphasis on self-ownership is leading to the atomistic society.

Because other Czech philosophers, economists and political scientists wanted to reply and wrote their papers as well, the publishing house Filosofia (a part of the Academy of Sciences of the Czech Republic) decided to publish the whole discussion as a book. It will contain all the papers that appeared in the Philosophical Journal and new papers that have not been published yet: together 19 articles, including two papers written by Philippe Van Parijs. The book will be published under a title Vseobecný základní příjem (Universal Basic Income) in the Czech language in the series Philosophy and Social Science in Prague in the end of October this year (201 pages).

* FINLAND: GREEN MINISTER SUPPORTS BASIC INCOME FOR THE DISABLED

On August 20, 2007, Finland’s main Newspaper Helsingin Sanomat reported that Green Minister of Labour Tarja Cronberg was planning the introduction of a basic income for the disabled. “Employment for those with limited capacity could be promoted by extending the subsidies that are available for those in low-paying jobs to the partly disabled - in addition to young people. There are plans for a survey on the possibilities of those on disability pension to return to work. In addition to these plans for the immediate future, Cronberg foresees a basic income as the model for the longer term. She expects that the first steps toward basic income will be taken in a year. She envisions a simplified social welfare system that would combine incentives to work with a guarantee of subsistence for all”, Helsingin Sanomat reported.

* NAMIBIA: FUNDRAISING FOR BASIC INCOME PILOT PROJECT

The Basic Income Grant Coalition in Namibia is a broad-based civil society coalition, which was formed in April 2005 to advocate for the implementation of a Basic Income Grant (BIG) in Namibia to fight poverty and foster economic development. At the end of 2006, the understanding in the BIG Coalition grew that the BIG campaign needs to be taken a step further by starting a pilot project of the BIG in Namibia. The background is that a pilot project might be able to concretely show that a BIG can work and will indeed have the predicted positive effects on poverty alleviation and economic development.

The BIG Coalition has started to implement the BIG pilot project in Otjivero/Omitara, a small village in the East of Namibia. On July 31st 2007, a team of the BIG Coalition registered 1005 people in this small village to receive a grant of N$100,- (Euro 12,-) per person per month for two years starting in January 2008.

On August 6th 2007, Bishop Dr. Z. Kameeta officially launched the BIG FUND in order to start fundraising for the pilot project, which entirely depends on contributions by Namibians and the international community. The first person who responded to the call for donations was Honourable Dr. Hage Geingob, the first Prime Minister of the Republic of Namibia and current Member of Parliament. The payment of the grant including the administration requires an amount N$ 3 million (~ Euro 315,000) over the period of the two years. The BIG Coalition appeals to proponents of the idea of a BIG to also support the BIG pilot project financially, by either giving a once-off donation or by a monthly contribution for one or two or three grants for the 24 months period. (e.g. N$ 100 per month for 24 months: N$ 2,400)

For more information on the BIG pilot project and the BIG Coalition, see the webpage of the BIG Coalition: http://www.bignam.org or write to web@bignam.org

* UNITED KINGDOM: TOWARDS A "SINGLE WORKING AGE BENEFIT"?

In its most recent issue, available online at http://www.citizensincome.org/, The Citizen's Income Newsletter reports that UK's "Work and Pensions Select Committee" has published a report entitled "Benefits Simplification" (July 26, 2007). The committee has studied the sources of complexity (and particularly tax credits and means-testing), the benefits of simplification, the possibility of introducing a 'complexity index', the effect of high marginal deduction rates on incentives to work, the claimant experience, and the Department for Work and Pensions' Benefit Simplification Unit. The final chapters of the first volume of the report discuss possibilities for incremental change towards greater simplicity and also possibilities for fundamental change. Their conclusions and recommendations, the Citizen's Income Trust (CIT) reports, include the following:

* 'There is a direct correlation between the amount of mean-testing and the complexity of the system. We recommend that the Government specifically evaluates the current caseload of means-testing in the system as part of its simplification efforts and, where possible, reduces it.' (paragraph 51).
* 'The contributory principle adds an additional layer to the current system and research suggests it is no longer as relevant to the benefits system as it once was. We therefore recommend that the Government reviews whether or not the contributory principle remains a relevant part of the modern benefit structure' (paragraph 55).
* 'There is no Government Minister, department or unit which is attempting to address the combined and overlapping complexities of the benefits and tax credits systems. This omission must be urgently addressed' (paragraph 148).
* 'We recommend that the Government undertakes research to investigate whether there remain some groups of claimants for whom work does not offer the best route out of poverty, and more detailed analysis of the impact of high Marginal Deduction Rates in parts of the benefits system on overall work incentives' (paragraph 176).
* 'It is not enough to rely on 'masking' complexity; there is a need to go further and address the rules of the different benefits and the structure of the system itself' (paragraph 262).
* 'The Government should establish a Welfare Commission, similar in format and remit to the Pensions Commission, which can take a holistic, model alternative systems, and come up with a considered blueprint for a way forward. A benefits system which DWP staff, claimants and welfare rights advisers have a hope of understanding is in everyone's best interests' (paragraph 381).

Appendix A contains the committee's detailed proposal for a Single Working Age Benefit (SWAB): 'The SWAB would provide an income for anyone who is legitimately resident in the UK and is both willing and able to work (or is exempted from the latter criterion because of illness, disability or caring responsibilities ....). It would, therefore, replace Income Support, Jobseeker's Allowance and the planned Employment and Support Allowance, and the need for any linking rules for people moving between them' (p.108).

The SWAB would continue as an in-work benefit, and would be reclaimed through the tax system at a Government-agreed Marginal Deduction Rate (MDR) as wages rose until it was exhausted (the MDR taking into account current rates of income tax and national insurance contributions). The SWAB would therefore replace tax credits and all benefits withdrawal rates and would avoid the need for people moving in and out of employment to notify changes. People already in work would be able to claim the SWAB. The system would abolish means-testing at the point of application. Additions for carers and people with disabilities would be paid, and a SWAB claim would automatically trigger Housing and Council Tax Benefits. Importantly, the SWAB would have no long-term rate (thus eliminating an employment disincentive), and the individual (and not the household) would be the claimant unit.

According to the Citizen's Income Newsletter, the SWAB is nine tenths of the way to a basic income and to all of the advantages which a basic income would offer, particularly in relation to simplicity and to incentives to increase earnings. All that would be required to complete the journey towards the greatest possible simplicity and employment incentives would be to replace the Marginal Deduction Rate with a reduction of personal tax allowances (which would have the same effect as the MDR), to remove the seeking-employment and incapacity tests (which, in the absence of an MDR, would become irrelevant), and to enable every individual to claim a SWAB, whatever their earnings.

The Select Committee's report was published on the 26th July 2007 by authority of the House of Commons by The Stationery Office Ltd., ref. HC 463 (2 volumes). The first volume can be found at:

* DANISH / SWEDISH

This Danish-Swedish anthology on basic income is the result of a study group at the Nordic Summer University in 2003-2006. Most of the authors come from the basic income networks in Denmark and Sweden. The book features very different approaches and arguments for basic income. Some articles are written in Danish, others in Swedish.

The first portion of the book views basic income in the perspective of 'time for life', and in this context three life stories are presented (Sven G. Sjöberg, Niels Lundsager, Gunilla Paulsen and Kicki Bobacka). Following this is a chapter analysing the ideas, including those relating to basic income, of the German artist Joseph Beuys (Lasse Ekstrand).

In the next section of the book basic income is seen consecutively in an historical perspective (Mats Högglund), as a further development of democracy (Jørn Loftager) and as a socialist project (Erik Olin Wright). Basic income is further discussed from a feminist perspective (Gunna Starck and Erik Christensen) and as an element in a sustainable development (Marc D. Davidson and Erik Christensen). Ellen Brun and Christian Ydesen discuss basic income as a global liberation project from Marxian and Hardt/Negrian points of view. Finally basic income and different views on justice are discussed by Søren Flinch Midtgård (John Rawls), Karsten Lieberkind (Philippe Van Parijs) and Simon Birnbaum (social republicanism).

In the last part of the book various proposals for financing a basic income in Denmark and Sweden are discussed by Mats Höglund (Sweden), Per Sørensen (a negative come tax proposal in Denmark) and Per Almgren (a proposal for a new monetary system). The book is concluded with excerpts from the Swedish debate on basic income (Lennart Fernström), and a view on basic income as being in a position between exclusion and inclusion in the public debate (Erik Christensen).

HARDIES, Kris (2007), Groene partijen en het basisinkomen: beïnvloeden verkiezingsuitslagen de partij-ideologie?, Brussels: Vrije Universiteit Brussel (VUB), Master Thesis, Political Science (supervisor: Patrick Stouthuysen), 166p. Author’s address: kris.hardies@vub.ac.be Political parties, ideology and elections are logically interlinked. This Master Thesis examines this link and suggests that parties adjust their platforms in response to results of previous elections. In other words, it suggests that elections shape parties ideologies. It does so by examining the (evolution in) opinions of the Flemish and Dutch green parties about basic income.

VAN LANCKER, Wim (2007), Recht op luiheid? Een politiek-filosofische analyse van het basisinkomen in het kader van een sociaal Europa. (The Right to be Lazy? A political and philosophical analysis of basic income in the context of a Social Europe), Ghent: Universiteit Gent, Master Thesis in Political Science (supervisor: Dr. Patrick Loobuyck), 108pp. Author’s address: wwwlanck.vanlancker@ugent.be

The theoretical foundation of my dissertation consist of a political and philosophical analysis of the ‘Just Society’ and how the concept of a basic income can serve as an instrument to achieve that purpose. Also in this part the perceived duty of reciprocity is further elaborated. With four arguments it is argued that basic income does not violate that principle. Thereafter basic income is placed vis-à-vis contemporary welfare states in the European Union. The achievements of welfare states with respect to the fight on poverty are analysed and it is explored whether basic income, given its possible merits regarding the abolition of poverty traps, could be a strengthening of these welfare states. Further, these preceding considerations are more specifically applied to the ideal of a Social Europe and the European Social Model. To achieve that ideal I propose, as a first step towards a basic income, the implementation of a universal basic pension (UBP) within all member states of the EU, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity but with financial support from the Union. The duty to provide a UBP should be included into the legal acquis. To conclude, I dwell briefly upon some possible financial resources for this purpose, e.g. a reallocation of the agricultural budget or a European tax on energy consumption or kerosene.

This short essay by Joseph Meyer, a member of the small basic income focused political party Vivant (founded by BIEN Life-member Roland Duchâtelet) and political actor in the German-speaking region of Belgium, includes a presentation of a basic income model with a "new monetary system", partly inspired by the writings of Joseph Huber. Also available in German and French (see NewsFlash 45 and 46, respectively). The essay can be downloaded at: http://www.vivant-ostbelgien.org/Thinking.differently.pdf

MATSAGANIS, Manos (2007), ‘Ενα βασικό εισόδημα για όλους ή ελάχιστο εγγυημένο για τους φτωχούς’, To BHMA, special "Forum of Ideas" (issue 5, Friday 7 September 2007).

This short article was published in the influential centre-left daily To BHMA (roughly translated as "The Forum"), in a monthly supplement called "Forum of Ideas" (no. 5, Friday 7 September 2007). In the article, written for the uninitiated public, Manos Matsaganis (University of Crete) goes through the main ideas of the basic income movement. The concluding paragraph reads as follows: "[...] Should all this concerns us? Does it make sense to discuss a basic income in Greece, one of the very few EU countries where not even a means-tested guaranteed minimum income exists? I think it does. Firstly, because it amounts to an imaginative attempt to provide ingenious solutions to some of the most urgent social problems of our times. Besides, because the basic income proposal is more realistic than it appears at first sight. Lastly, because the entire campaign for a basic income is conducted with humour and an awareness of its own limits, without resorting to thoughtless partisanship and rhetorical inventions."

* FREEDOM INSTEAD OF FULL EMPLOYMENT
An article by Katrin Pinetzk on “The Abolition of Unemployment” originally published in German in August 2007 is now available in English at:
Excerpt: “Researchers urge freedom instead of full employment. With a basic income, the unemployed of today would have the freedom to seek for employment that suits them. No one would force them to accept any work. A basic income is a way to solve the dilemma of jobs destroyed by productivity.”

* MARKET, DEMOCRACY & SURVIVAL by Roy Morrison
"Markets, Democracy & Survival" lays out a plan for the U.S. to replace all taxes on income (personal, corporate and payroll) with a new 18% ecological value added tax or E-VAT on all goods and services. There will be no more income taxes and no more individual tax returns. This is a market based solution for the global warming and sustainability challenge of the 21st century.
According to Morrison, ecological taxes can make economic growth mean ecological improvement, not ecological destruction. Ecological consumption taxes, phased in over ten years, will make sustainable goods cost less, gain market share, and have higher rates of profit. What's polluting will cost more and lose market share and have lower rates of profit.
"Markets, Democracy & Survival" includes details of a negative income tax to respond to the regressive nature of consumption taxation by making sure, at a minimum, that current tax burdens on the 40% of households with lowest income do not increase. The book also outlines plans for a National Trust to overcome market failures and invest in sustainability.

* MONETARY REFORM AND C.H. DOUGLAS by Richard Cook
An article by Richard Cook on CH. Douglas has been published by Global Research on September 24, 2007. C.H. Douglas (1879-1952) advocated a National Dividend, which would actually be the proper share of individuals in the bounty of the nation’s economy and resources. Cook believes that Douglas’s ideas merge with those of a basic income guarantee as a measure of economic freedom and justice promoted by many economists and advocates today.

* BASIC FOOD INCOME by Rolf Künemann
The New School of Athens (NSOA) is a recent international initiative whose mission statement is to explore new and better ways of managing our world. NSOA aims at becoming a 21st century version of Plato’s ancient Academy, focusing on the management of globalization and the democratization of world governance. On August 21, 2007, it published an article by Rolf Künemann entitled “Basic Food Income: Option or Obligation?”. Basic food income is a universal payment by the state unconditionally to each member of society with an amount sufficient to cover elementary food needs.
