4. More about BIEN

1. EDITORIAL

As previously announced to most of you, this is the first of the NewsFlashes which BIEN will be sending six times a year to a list of over half a thousand interested people throughout Europe and beyond. If you want your address removed from this list, just send the message "unssubscribe BIEN" to bien@etes.ucl.ac.be. If you would like other people to be included, simply send their full names and e-mails to the same address. As a complement to the NewsFlashes, a printed Newsletter will keep being sent twice a year to all paid-up members of BIEN. Both previous news flashes and previous newsletters can be downloaded at BIEN Online: http://www.basicincome.org.

If you wish to express your support by becoming a member of BIEN, just follow the instructions at the end of this document, which also features the list of BIEN's first life members, or visit http://www.etes.ucl.ac.be/BIEN/JoinBIEN.htm. In order not to overload this first (and therefore experimental) NewsFlash, we are keeping for the next issue our brief reviews of recent publications - including new books by Bourguignon, Bresson, Lerner, Lo Vuolo and Raventos - and historical notes on two nineteenth-century forerunners. We hope you will find this new way of communicating congenial.

BERLIN (G), 6-7 October 2000, BIEN's 8th CONGRESS: "Economic citizenship rights for the XXIst century"

The 8th International Congress of the Basic Income European Network will be held at the Wissenschaftszentrum Berlin on 6-7 October 2000, with the financial support of the Heinrich Böll Stiftung, the Hans Böckler Stiftung and the International Labour Organization. As usual, it will combine plenary sessions and parallel workshops. The advisory Kongressbeirat consists of Professor Anthony B. Atkinson, Lord Ralf Dahrendorf, Lord Maghnad Desai, André Gorz, France, Michel Hansenne MEP, Professor Ruth Lister, Lord Raymond Plant, Michel Rocard MEP, Professor Fritz W. Scharpf, Professor Herbert A. Simon, Senator Eduardo Suplicy, Professor James Tobin, and Professor Salvatore Veca. The organising committee is chaired by Professor Claus Offe, of Humboldt University. Detailed information, a call for papers and a registration form can be obtained from the secretariat of the organising committee (bien@rz.hu-Berlin.de) or from BIEN's web site (http://www.basicincome.org). The deadline for paper proposals is March 3st. The deadline for registration is July 15th, with a reduced fee for those registering before July 1st.

MILAN (IT), 8 March 2000, "Il reddito di cittadinanza"

A debate on the proposal of a universal basic income at Milan's "Casa della Cultura", with the participation of Michele Salvati, professor of political economy at Milan University, member of parliament for Prime Minister D'Alema's party DS, author of La sinistra, il governo, l'Europa (1997), Daniele Checchi, professor of labour economics at Milan University, author of Ladisuguaglianza (1997), and Philippe Van Parijs, professor of economic and social ethics at Louvain University, author of Real Freedom for All (1995). LONDON (UK), 7-10 July 2000, 12th Annual Conference of the Society for the Advancement of Socio-Economics: "Citizenship and Exclusion"

Founded in 1989 at the initiative of Amitai Etzioni, the Society for the Advancement of Socio-Economics (SASE) is an interdisciplinary organisation with members in over 50 countries on five continents. It aims to support "the intellectual exploration of economic behaviour and its policy implications within the context of societal, institutional, historical, philosophical, psychological and ethical factors". Its 2000 meeting will be hosted by the London School of Economics and its theme should be very congenial to people interested in basic income: "Citizenship and Exclusion". For further details about the conference, contact the local organiser: Prof. David Marsden, LES, Houghton Street, London WC2A 2AER, d.marsden@lse.ac.uk.

BOGOTA (Colombia), 17-22 July 2000, "La justicia como libertad real para todos y la propuesta de un ingreso basico incondicional"

A full week of interdisciplinary seminars and public events on "Justice as real freedom for all and the proposal of an unconditional basic income", with the participation of Oscar Mejía Quintana, Roberto Gargarella, Andres Hernández (Universidad de los Andes), Jorge Ivan Gonzales, Jorge Enrique Vargas, Juan Jose Botero, Leopoldo Munera (Universidad Nacional), Felix Ovejero (Universidad de Barcelona) and Philippe Van Parijs (Université catholique de Louvain). 3. BITS OF NEWS

EUROPEAN UNION

The Portuguese Presidency organises a major seminar on the future of guaranteed incomes. After Luxemburg (1986) and France (1988), in 1999 it has been Portugal's turn to join the growing majority of EU member states which have adopted some sort of guaranteed minimum income scheme. The scheme Portugal has adopted is of the standard means-tested, household-based type. But Portugal's Ministry of Labour and Solidarity has decided to make use of the six-month Portuguese Presidency of the European Union to prompt an evaluation of Europe's existing guaranteed minimum schemes and prospective thinking beyond them. On 1-2 February 2000, in collaboration with the Social Studies Centre of Coimbra University, it is organising in Southern Portugal a major European Seminar on "Policies and Instruments to Fight Poverty in the European Union: Guaranteeing the Minimum Income". The plenary session on the final afternoon is entitled "Alternative models of guaranteed income: the debate on citizenship income" and introduced by Pierre Guibentif (International Institute of Legal Philosophy) and Philippe Van Parijs (Louvain University). BELGIUM

Founding member of BIEN becomes green party leader. Philippe Defeyt was one of the leading members of the Collectif Charles Fourier, which launched the French-language on basic income ("allocation universelle") in 1984-85 and organized BIEN’s founding conference in 1986. He restated his support for basic income in a recent book. On 28 November 1999, he was elected, with a 510 to 401 majority, federal secretary of Belgium’s francophone green party ECOLO. In July 1999, ECOLO had entered, for the first time since it was founded in 1979, Belgium’s federal government. E-mail: philippe.defeyt@ecolo.be.

FRANCE

Castel, Bresson, Godino and others in debate at the Sorbonne This conference on "Travail choisi, droit au revenu, temps libéré" was excellently organised by a group of young academics linked to France's socialist and green parties. It provided, among other things, the opportunity for a fruitful exchange between the former adviser of Michel Rocard, Roger Godino, and the respected sociologist Robert Castel. Godino (rgodino@club-internet.fr) is the author of a recent and much discussed proposal for making France’s guaranteed minimum income (RMI) incentive-friendly by turning it into a sort of negative income tax. He eloquently presented his proposal, in contrast to more ambitious full basic income schemes, as an expression of his MAYA approach ("Most Advanced Yet Achievable"). Robert Castel, on the other hand, is reputed to be, along with Pierre Rosanvallon, one of France's fiercest opponents to an unconditional basic income. In the discussion, he confirmed, however, that he believed Godino's proposal to go in the right direction, in so far as it helped correct the RMI's main structural defect: the creation of unemployment traps. While insisting that playing with graphs and effective marginal tax rates was not his cup of tea, he seemed to concede that if one could show that a basic income would not reinforce exclusion from paid work but improve incentives in the same way as Godino's proposal, he would not object to it. In the final presentation, the Rennes-based and green-linked economist Yann Moulier-Boutang (Yann.M. Boutang@wanadoo.fr) argued in favour of a basic income on the ground that there were many ways of participating in society and countless unpaid activities that produced major positive externalities. Would this not justify a broadly conceived "participation income", rather than an unconditional income? A participation income would be OK, he answered, if the participation condition was so phrased that it could be satisfied by reading two books a month. Other speakers included Marc Heim (University of Paris & federalist movement), Jerome Gleizes University of Southern Britanny & economic commission of the French greens), Yolanda Bresson (University of Paris-St Maur and president of AIRE) and Philippe Van Parijs (University of Louvain and secretary of BIEN), and activists from several grass-roots organisations contributed to a lively final debate. The general conclusion (if any) was that things would not move forward without an effective triangular co-operation between visionaries, fixers and arse-kickers - sometimes uneasy, no doubt, but essential. The organisers intend publishing edited proceedings. A workshop on basic income in Marseille A workshop on "Minima sociaux et allocation universelle" was organised at the IDEP-GREQAM, Marseille, Vieille Charité, on 14 January 2000. Introduced for the most part by researchers at the Universities of Aix-Marseille, much of it focused on basic income and how it would differ from the currently existing RMI. One of the guest speakers was Laurent Caussat (l.caussat@cae.pm.gouv.fr), one of the few economists on the staff of the Conseil d’Analyse Economique (Prime Minister Lionel Jospin’s "council of economic advisers"). In the paper he circulated and presented, he argues in favour of the desirability and affordability of Roger Godino’s proposal of an "allocation compensatoire de revenus" (a household-based negative income tax). As part of an attempt to make France’s tax-and-transfer system more "optimal". For further information on the workshop: Prof. Claude Gamel, Université d’Aix-Marseille III Faculté d’économie appliquée, Centre Forbin - Allée Claude Forbin 15-19, F - 13627 AIX-EN-PROVENCE, France, claude.gamel@VMESA12.U-3MRS.FR.

ITALY

Thousands of signatures for a guaranteed minimum income In December 1999, 70,000 signatures were collected at the initiative of various left-wing organisations in support of a proposal of a "guaranteed social income" (means-tested but without a willingness-to-work requirement, funded out of a new tax on capital). Together with Spain and Greece, Italy is the only EU member state in which no national guaranteed minimum scheme is in place. Background and details of the particular proposal can be found in Martufi, Rita & Vasapollo, Luciano. Profit State, redistribuzione dell'accumulazione e reddito sociale minimo, Napoli: La Città del Sole, 1999, 402p. & in issue 2/99 of Proteo (in particular in the article "Sul reddito di cittadinanza" by Andrea Fumagalli (e-mail: afuma@eco.unipv.it), professor of economics at the University of Pavia). NETHERLANDS

Tax reform, key step towards a basic income? In January 2000, the Dutch Parliament ("Tweede Kamer") approved the essentials of the government’s plan for a comprehensive tax reform. From January 2001 onwards, the income tax will be levied on a much broader tax base. One component of this reform did not raise any objection in parliament and is of particular interest to basic income supporters: the exemption on the lower tranche of income will be abolished and replaced by a strictly individual tax credit at a level of about DFl 3500 per year (or Euro 140 per month) for all families with at least one worker. The Netherlands already have universal (i.e. non-means tested) systems of child benefits, of student grants and of non-contributory basic pensions, in addition to one of the world’s most generous and comprehensive means-tested guaranteed income schemes. This "negative income tax" aspect of the tax reform therefore seems to provide, admittedly at a low level, the last missing element for the provision of a universal income floor. In the latest issue of the newsletter of the Dutch basic income network (Nieuwbrief Basisinkomen n°29, December 1999), Saar Boerlage and Emiel Schäfer welcome the plan’s general direction, but they believe it could and should have been more ambitious. First, the government should not have shied away from making the individual tax credit individually refundable, so that a worker’s non-working partner, for example, would be entitled to a cash payment equivalent to the credit. Instead, the two individual credits are lumped together, and the levels are such that no household will ever end up with a negative tax liability. Second, the level of the tax credit could have pitched higher, for example at the current level of the guaranteed income (bijstand) of each member of a couple, i.e. Euro 600 per month. This would have provided a far stronger stimulus to the further expansion of part-time jobs which the government aims to stimulate. UNITED KINGDOM - Citizenship Income Online

On the 27th of January 2000, the Citizen’s Income Research Centre launched “CI Online”. First discussion topic: "Should a CI be introduced to all demographic groups (defined by age, sex and/or socio-economic standing) simultaneously, or is there an argument for piecemeal introduction?" The first 2000 issue of the Citizen's Income newsletter has also been published (January 2000, 16p.), with many reports, announcements and book reviews. Contact: Stuart Duffin, Director of Citizen's Income, LSE, St Philips Building, Sheffield Street, London WC2A 2EX (e-mail: S.Duffin@lse.ac.uk). CI web site: http://www.citizensincome.org.

UNITED STATES

First seeds of a Basic Income North American Network? After a first seminar in January 2000 at the Hunter School of Social Work in New York, an informal group of U.S. based basic income supporters decided to hold more seminars in the near future, to put together a web site, and hopefully, within the next two years, to organise a basic income conference in the United States. Contact: Dr Karl Widerquist, Levy Institute at widerqui@levy.org.

Robert Theobald Died "On Saturday November 27th, 1999, Robert Theobald's body died and his spirit was set free." In the 1960s, he was one of the people who most contributed to drawing public attention to the idea of a guaranteed minimum income, which he saw as increasingly relevant as human work was made redundant by technological progress. His work helped sow the very first seeds of Europe's contemporary basic income debate. Thus, his book Free Men and Free Markets (New York: C.N. Potts, 1963), published in Dutch under the more explicit title Gewaarborg de inkomen in een vrije maatschappij: economische en sociale gevolgen van de automatisering ["Guaranteed income in a free society: Economic and social consequences of automation"], Hilversum & Antwerpen: Paul Brand, 1967, explicitly inspired J.P. Kuiper, a professor of social medicine at the Free University of Amsterdam, who became Holland's first prominent advocate of an unconditional basic income in the mid-seventies. In June 1996, he e-mailed to BIEN: "I would like to reference your movement in a new book I am preparing in the footnotes. Please give me a suggested wording. This book is on a very fast track so the quicker the better. Blessings and Peace, Robert". Followed by a heartening quote: "All truth passes three stages: first, it is ridiculed. Second, it is violently opposed. Third, it is accepted as being self-evident. Schopenhauer" Full biographical information on Robert Theobald is available from Bob Stilger, Executive Director, Northwest Regional Facilitators, East 525 Mission Avenue, Spokane, WA 99202, USA, e-mail: rstilger@nrf.org or from: http://www.transform.org/transform/tlc/rtbio.html.

How to become a member of BIEN

Membership of BIEN is open to anyone who shares its objectives. The individual membership fee is 25 Euros for 1999-2000 or 100 Euros for life membership. BIEN Members receive hard copies of the Newsletter, are kept informed of relevant meetings, seminars and research projects and have voting rights at BIEN's General Assembly held every second year in conjunction with the Congress. A broad membership strengthens BIEN in its efforts to put basic income on academic and political agendas. It also provides much appreciated support to the unpaid activity of the Executive Committee and gives BIEN a firm basis for the funding of its modest running costs. A full statement of accounts is submitted to the General Assembly. To become a BIEN member, please fill out the Membership Subscription Form or download the Individual Membership Form which are both on the BIEN web site (http://www.etes.ucl.ac.be/BIEN/JoinBien.htm). An acknowledgment will be sent upon receipt. For further questions, e-mail BIEN at bien@etes.ucl.ac.be.

1. EDITORIAL

The UK’s Citizen’s Income Study Centre has had to suddenly close its office at the LSE owing to its funding not being renewed. At about the same time, Spain’s Red Renta Básica is getting off the ground, with its first General Assembly held and its first committee elected (see "Events" below). Diverging fortunes for two of our national networks which should keep us alert to managing our resources on the model of marathon runners.

Despite Citizen’s Income having unexpectedly dropped out, issue 36 of our printed newsletter will be posted shortly to all full members.

We hope you will find this light mid-Summer flash instructive and wish you a relaxing holiday.

SANTA ROSA (US), 4 May 2001. ROBERT SCHUTZ DIES

Robert Schutz, a long-time advocate of basic income, died on the 4th of May, 2001, after a short illness. An economist of varied interests, he taught at the University of California at Berkeley, was the CEO of the American Society for Eastern Arts and the Public Affairs Director of KPFA, the first listener-sponsored educational radio station in North America. In his book "The $30,000 Solution" (Santa Barbara, 1996), he argued for setting both a minimum and maximum level of income and for the introduction of a high universal basic income. He came to BIEN's 1996 Amsterdam Congress and took an active part in it. Robert Schutz's memory will remain with us and keep strengthening our faith in the possibility of a better world.

BARCELONA (ES), 8-9 June 2001: FIRST SYMPOSIUM OF SPAIN'S BASIC INCOME NETWORK

For its official launching, the Red Renta Básic held a successful first Symposium, with over one hundred participants and a significant newspaper, radio and TV coverage (see e.g. Dani Raventos's piece in the daily El Pais on 12 June 2001: http://www.elpais.es). A book based on the symposium is being planned by the Fundacion Bofill. On the following day, the founding meeting of the network took place. As all conditions for a successful application seem to be fulfilled - a focus on promoting a non-sectarian, well-informed debate on an unconditional universal basic income and related ideas -, the newly founded Spanish network has decided to apply for an official recognition by BIEN (on a par with the Dutch, British and Irish networks). It has also elected its first executive committee: Chairman: Daniel Raventós, Deputy chairman: Rafael Pinilla and José Antonio Noguera, Secretaries: David Casassas & Anna Paris, treasurer: Jorge Calero, members: Albert Demetrio, Rocío Martínez, Luis Sanzo. For further information, visit http://www.redrentabasica.org or contact "Daniel Raventos" at ravento@eco.ub.es.

BASTIA (FR), 19-20 June 2001: CONFERENCE ON FIGHTING SOCIAL EXCLUSION

Organised by the staff and students of Corsica's " Institut Régional d'Administration ", which trains civil servants for the French administration, this (French-language) conference devoted one whole afternoon to basic income as a way of tackling poverty. The afternoon started with a debate between Denis Clerc (the driving force behind the influential French magazine "Alternatives économiques and a major voice on the French Left), who criticized basic incomel as being unfeasible (while defending a form of negative income tax) and Yannick Vanderborght (researcher at Louvain University, Belgium), who argued for basic income on both pragmatic and moral grounds. The debate was followed by a long and lively discussion with the audience. Organisers : Institut Régional d'Administration de Bastia, Quai des Martyrs de la Libération, 20200 Bastia, France, ira.bastia@wanadoo.fr, http://www.fonction-publique.gouv.fr/irabastia.

LONDON (UK), 2 July 2001: A NEW DIRECTOR FOR CITIZEN'S INCOME

In May, Stuart Duffin resigned as Director of the Citizens Income Research Centre to take up a post in Scotland. Subsequently, the Joseph Rowntree Charitable Trust decided to fund the organisation no longer, and the lease on the office at the LSE has come to an end. On the 2nd July the trustees appointed Dr. Malcolm Torry (who was director during the early '90s) as part-time director.

New address:
- Until the 1st of September: Citizens Income Trust, St. George's Vicarage, 89 Westcombe Park Road, London SE3 7RZ;

GENEVA, 12-14 September 2002: NINTH CONGRESS OF THE BASIC INCOME EUROPEAN NETWORK

Preparation is progressing, under the leadership of Guy Standing (GuyStanding@compuserve.com), co-chair of BIEN and director of the ILO's InFocus Programme on Socio-Economic Security, with the collaboration of Bridget Dommen-Meade (bdommen@hotmail.com) and Lena Lavinas (lavinas@ilo.org).

3. GLIMPSES OF NATIONAL DEBATES

CANADA: LEFT PARTY ADOPTS BASIC INCOME PROPOSAL

At its June 2001 congress, the Rassemblement pour l'Alternative progressiste (RAP), the most significant party to the left of the two main parties (Parti libéral and Bloc québécois) adopted the proposal of a universal "citizenship income" at the level of the official poverty line. At the next elections for Québec's provincial Parliament, the RAP will be part of a broader front (Union des Forces progressistes), which will also campaign in favour of proportional representation. For further information, contact Jean Lambert (jlambert@hotmail.com).

GERMANY: MODEST STEP TOWARDS A BASIC PENSION

A major pension reform initiated by pension minister Walter Riester which was finally approved by the Bundesrat (second chamber of the German Parliament) on 16 February and 11 May 2001. It introduces a new pension formula which is meant to reflect economic as well as demographic developments and will lead to a general reduction of pension benefits. To mitigate these cuts and to guarantee the standard of living in old age, private pension plans will be subsidised. For those in need, a basic pension ("bedarfsgeprüfte Grundsicherung") will be provided from 2003 onwards: People over 65 years of age (and also handicapped people over 18) are entitled to this benefit after a means test. The benefit is similar to social assistance, but - and this is a major innovation in the German context - there are lesse family obligations than before regarding income maintenance. The means test includes only the individual and his/her household members but not children who live in separate households (unless their income exceeds 100.000 Euro per year). This should hinder hidden poverty among the elderly. The means test will be repeated every year. The basic pension will be financed by taxes. More information on this pension reform is available at http://www.bma.de.

BELGIUM: PRIZE STRENGTHENS CREDIBILITY OF BASIC INCOME

On 28 June, Philippe Van Parijs (professor at the Université catholique de Louvain) was given by Crown Prince Philippe of Belgium the Francqui Prize for 2001. The Francqui Prize is Belgium's main scientific distinction. Worth EUR 100.000 tax-free, it is awarded once a year to a Belgian scholar aged less than 50. The international jury awarded the 2001 prize to Van Parijs for his work as "one of the main philosophers of social justice in today's world". But a significant part of the considerable press coverage focused on Van Parijs's advocacy of basic income. Thus the French-language daily Le Soir (29/06/01) carried a full-page interview entitled "Basic income is a weapon against exclusion", while the main Dutch-language dailies's titles were "BF 10.000 per month for everyone, scientifically crowned" (De Standaard, 29/06/01), "Francqui Prize for basic income theorist: 'It is an academic's task to be right too early.'" (De Morgen, 29/06/01) and "Universal basic income, a perfect response to neo-liberalism" (De Financieel-economische Tijd, 29/06/01). As to The Bulletin, the English-language "newsweekly of the capital of Europe" and the main medium of Brussels's Eurocrat community, it published a long interview under the heading "Free Lunch for Everyone. Charlie Onians meets an academic whose radical views on the redistribution of wealth have won him a prestigious prize and a place in high-level political debates (19/07/01). Van Parijs's "acceptance speech" (which indicates, among other things, what he intends doing with the money!) can be found on http://www.etes.ucl.ac.be/.

ENGLISH

CUNLIFFE John & ERREYGERS Guido, "The Enigmatic Legacy of Charles Fourier: Joseph Charlier and Basic Income", History of Political Economy 33(3), Fall 2001, 459-484. (Second author's address: Department of Economics, Faculty of Applied Economics, University of Antwerp, Prinsstraat 13, 2000 Antwerpen 1, Belgium, guido.erreygers@ua.ac.be.)

This paper explores a completely neglected early formulation of the basic income idea - conventionally defined as an income unconditionally granted to all on an individual basis, without means test or work requirement. Until now it was believed that the first fully-fledged basic income proposal, known as 'State Bonus', was formulated in 1919, while some core aspects of the basic income approach can be traced back to Thomas Paine and Charles Fourier. In our paper we focus upon the Fourierist tradition. First we demonstrate that Fourier's own idea of the 'right to the minimum' differs considerably from the modern 'basic income'. Fourier held a physical concept of the minimum, and in addition he stressed that its introduction could only take place under certain conditions, of which the most important was the availability of 'attractive labour'. Next we review how the idea of the minimum was associated with the 'right to work' by some of Fourier's disciples, notably Victor Considérant. Finally, we concentrated on the writings of the Belgian writer Joseph Charlier, strongly inspired by the Fourierist tradition and now almost entirely forgotten. He unambiguously transformed Fourier's "minimum" into a genuine basic income scheme, which he first proposed in great detail in 1848, and continued to defend for half a century.

A sustained argument for the actual existence and the normative desirability of a welfare regime distinct from those commonly identified (e.g. by Gosta Esping-Andersen): a "post-productivist" regime which "combines generous social benefits and a relaxed attitude towards work requirements, aiming at 'autonomy' as its core value". According to Goodin, this model, of which a universal basic income would be a paradigmatic component, is best approximated in the real world by the social policy pattern of the Netherlands.

A renowned political economist ever since the publication of The Political Economy of the Welfare State (1979), Ian Gough took part in the founding conference of BIEN (1986). He is now professor of social policy at the University of Bath and editor of the Journal of European Social Policy. The whole of the final chapter of his new book ("Free Freedom and Basic Income", pp. 203-217) is devoted to basic income, in the form of an in-depth critical discussion of Philippe Van Parijs's Real Freedom for All. Towards the end of his introductory chapter (pp. 26-27) he states succinctly his fundamental objections to the "best articulated alternative to existing post-war welfare states", i.e. a "basic income welfare state" characterised as "replacing all government transfers and some services with un unconditional income paid to all citizens, irrespective of present income, commitment to work or household membership". There are two reasons why Gough believe that this is "the wrong way forward". One is that it rests on "fundamentally individualist, libertarian world view", rather than on one which "recognises the social bases of our individuality" and therefore requires that "all persons who can should have the right - and the duty - to contribute in some way to the common wealth.". The second reason is that "Basic Income is historically and institutionally naive": "it does not recognise the role of institutions and path dependency in shaping social policies and their welfare outcomes". Unconditional cash benefits to certain groups may still be sound, "but these packages will vary according to welfare regime and form of capitalism".

Ever since his striking little book on Paupers. The Making of the New Claiming Class (1973), Bill Jordan, now professor of social policy at the Universities of Huddersfield and Exeter and member of the Board of Trustees of the Citizen's Income Trust, has been among the most vigorous advocates of basic income. In this new book, written jointly with his brother, he takes on New Labour's social policies and argues that they are plagued by fundamental tensions which can be resolved only through pushing them further towards a universal citizen's income: “a movement for a citizen’s income is likely to be generated by criticism of the tax credit approach, and would have as its natural constituent carers, volunteers, the community sector, and many others who recognize the shortcomings of the Third Way's version of distributive justice.” (p. 198) A CI, he argues, would be more effective than tax credits or a negative income tax, as a means of combating social exclusion, inequality of opportunity and disempowerment, and as a means of promoting trust and co-operation, democratic voice, lifelong learning and social cohesion.

A Feldenkrais Method practitioner and Washington-based political activist, Steven Shafarman wants to build a movement for two “citizen Policies”: Citizen Dividend and Citizen Service. "Citizens Dividend" is Shafarman's term for a universal basic income, whose pedigree he knows well, including the BIEN connection. "Citizen Service" refers to an obligation for all citizens to perform eight hours per month of service to the community, mandated though not enforced by the government, a very soft version of the social income/social service combination to be found in the French "distributist" and "federalist" schools, as well as in some early writings by André Gorz. Shafarman argues that everyone would be happier in a healthier society without the extremes of deprivation that exist today and with a feeling that we have all contributed to making our society a better place for everyone to live in.

This political pamphlet is an attractive short version of Shafarman's HealingPolitics (see above). It opens with a foreword by 'Granny D' Doris Haddock, who, in February 2000, at the age of 90, completed her 5000km walk across the United States, from California to Washington, in support of campaign finance reform. "The plan is fair, gives us all a level playing field, and could work. Please read this book, and think about it. Then act on it.", she recommends.

A welcome English translation of De Subventione Pauperum (1526), the earliest detailed formulation and defence of a guaranteed minimum income scheme by the Valencia-born humanist and Louvain University professor J.L. Vives. A right to subsistence, even to those who have deserved to become poor, but not to those who refuse to do the work they are asked to perform.

Is France on its way to an "unconditional minimum income"? It might well be, Vanderborght cautiously suggests, after the Jospin Government decided to implement, under the label "prime pour l'emploi" a modest version of a negative income tax for low-income workers (see BIEN's Newsflash 7). Published at the invitation of Mouvements, a left-wing monthly, the article is mainly aimed at clarifying some ambiguities and confusions which have characterized France's recent public debate on basic income and related schemes. The first part is focused on the "Belorgey Report", published by France's Central Planning Office ("Commissariat général du plan") in May 2000. This report states that basic income "makes no economic sense ", that it is an "ineffective" way of tackling poverty. Yet, at the same time, it argues for of a comprehensive form of negative income tax scheme, far closer to a genuine basic income that Jospin's "prime pour l'emploi". The second part of the article focuses on the latter and assesses the common left criticism that it constitute a "Friedmanian" or "neo-liberal" policy instrument.

HOW TO BECOME A MEMBER OF BIEN

Membership of BIEN is open to anyone who shares its objectives. The individual membership fee is 25 Euros for 1999-2000 or 100 Euros for life membership. BIEN Members receive hard copies of the Newsletter, are kept informed of relevant meetings, seminars and research projects and have voting rights at BIEN’s General Assembly held every second year in conjunction with the Congress. A broad membership strengthens BIEN in its efforts to put basic income on academic and political agendas. It also provides much appreciated support to the unpaid activity of the Executive Committee and gives BIEN a firm basis for the funding of its modest running costs. A full statement of accounts is submitted to the General Assembly.

To become a BIEN member, please fill out the Membership Subscription Form or download the Individual Membership Form which are both on the BIEN web site (http://www.etes.ucl.ac.be/BIEN/JoinBien.htm). An acknowledgment will be sent upon receipt. For further questions, e-mail BIEN at bien@etes.ucl.ac.be.
